TIPS TO HELP BUY • SELL • MOVE A MANUFACTURED HOME

Each city or county within Washington State has requirements that a homeowner must complete when they buy, sell, or move a manufactured home. Since each city or county can establish their own regulations, the following lists will vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

To be sure a homeowner is aware of all the requirements they need to contact the local governments in both current and future home locations before moving the home.

To find a qualified, insured, bonded transporter start with referrals from friends or relations that have had their home moved successfully. Manufactured Home Transporters are also listed in the yellow pages of your telephone directory. Obtain written bids from several transporters that you can work with. Have each transporter provide references and contact them. Moving a manufactured home requires certain permits. Many transporters include obtaining these permits, and their associated fees, in the cost of moving a home. A homeowner must verify what costs are included in the transporter's estimate before signing a contract. It may be appropriate to add to the contract "All work required for transportation (and/or installation) is included and no additional costs will be allowed." Often the transportation and the installation of a home are accomplished by the same contractor.

A Washington State certified installer shall be on site to supervise all phases of installation (RCW 43.63B, 1994). To verify if the person installing your home is certified, ask to see a WAINS card. You can also obtain installer certification information by calling the Office of Manufactured Housing at 1-800-964-0852 or by computer through the web site at www.cted.wa.gov/omh.

All manufactured housing installations must be inspected by your local building inspector.
